5 other suspects were previously arrested in Sudbury, Ontario, on drug related offences in relation to this investigation.

A news conference was held today at Peel Regional Police Headquarters outlining the details of this investigation.

Peel Regional Police Chief Mike Metcalf stated “Our commitment to preventing the illegal movement of guns into our community is supported by the close relationships our officers maintain with other law enforcement agencies. It is through this collaboration that successful investigations like Project Rebel help to keep our communities safe”.

O.P.P. Inspector Steve Clegg of the Provincial Weapons Enforcement Unit said “It is imperative that police services and other agencies work together to prevent firearms related crime. Project Rebel is a fine example of how effective these partnerships can be at putting a dent in the spread of illegal handguns”.

Special Agent Regina Lombardo, U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives stated, “These arrests and the continuing investigation in the United States demonstrate, yet again, what ATF and its Canadian partners can achieve when they join forces against firearms trafficking. By pooling our investigative and firearms tracing resources, we’ve broken up one cross-border firearms trafficking ring. Other traffickers should be on notice that we’ll use that same cooperation and collaboration to come after you.”
