NATIONAL CANINE DIVISION

2026 PLANNER

NATIONAL CANINE DIVISION

ATF's National Canine Division (NCD) is the leading federal authority for explosives and accelerant detection canines for law enforcement and military organizations. NCD was established in April 1995 to support a variety of high-risk law enforcement operations, including bomb, arson, explosives, and firearm investigations, as well as the more traditional protective search and sweep responsibilities at national security special events. It is the only scientifically-based canine detection program solely operated by law enforcement.

The canine teams go through rigorous training at the ATF Canine Training Center in Front Royal, Virginia. Once trained, the teams are assigned to local, state, federal and international law enforcement agencies, where they regularly lend support to investigations and national level security efforts.

Each year, ATF also hosts a series of canine certifications known as the National Odor Recognition Test (NORT), a nationally recognized proficiency standard used as a benchmark for effective canine explosives detection. The test allows canine teams to showcase their odor detection and teamwork skills while actively searching out and identifying a variety of explosive compounds, ignitable liquids, and gunpowder-related residue. This program serves as an opportunity for local, state, federal and military canine teams to learn new techniques from the nation's best teams and experts in the field.

Currently, ATF has 72 accelerant detection canine teams with state and local partners nationwide and 125 explosives detection canine teams nationwide, made up of 43 ATF K-9 teams — 39 Search Enhanced Evidence K-9s (S.E.E.K.) and 4 Explosive Detection K-9s — 54 other federal agency teams, and 28 state and local canine teams.
